

經濟學原理

Principles of Economics

Instructor:

艾德榮

Office hour : 每週二, 1:10 ~ 2:00

Office : B921

Tel : 2621-5656 x 3361

General Information:

This course is an introductory course to economics, or as the course title suggests, the principles of economics. The textbook for the course is Principles of Economics, International Student Edition, Newest Edition, by N. Gregory Mankiw, 台北：華泰文化. Material will be taught from the English version, but if you wish you may choose the Chinese version or an older English version, but students are responsible for the material in the newest English version as older versions or Chinese versions may be a little different. Please organize book ordering with the class leader, who will order the books through the Department of Economics. The homework questions and test material will come from the newest English version. We will begin with Chapter 1 and proceed as far through the book as time permits.

Grading:

Your final course grade will be based on homework and examinations, with extra points given for attendance. Assigned homework will count for 10% of your grade. The mid-term exam will count for 40% of your grade and the final exam will count for 50%. Extra points may be given for class and session attendance, where bonus points up to 15% of your grade may be given. A review of the material for the exams will be given the week before the midterm and final exams. Tests and homework will be given in English. You may use English or Chinese to write homework or answer test questions. Homework must be typed. On examinations YOU MUST WRITE CLEARLY.

Course website:

<http://www.ronaldaedwards.com/teaching.html>