General Information:

This course is an introductory course to economics, or as the course title suggests, the principles of economics. This course continues from the previous term's material and uses the same textbook. The textbook for the course is Principles of Economics, International Student Edition, Newest Edition, by N. Gregory Mankiw, 台北：華泰文化. Material will be taught from the English version, but if wish you may choose the Chinese version. The homework questions and test material will come from the newest English version. We will begin where we left off last semester and proceed as far through the book as time permits.

Grading:

Your final course grade will be based on homework and examinations, with extra points given for attendance. Assigned homework will count for 10% of your grade. The mid-term exam will count for 40% of your grade and the final exam will count for 50%. Extra points may be given for class and session attendance, where bonus points up to 15% of your grade may be given. A review of the material for the exams will be given the week before the midterm and final exams. Tests and homework will be given in English. You may use English or Chinese to write homework or answer test questions. Homework must be typed. On examinations YOU MUST WRITE CLEARLY.
